I worked at Mr. Ota's bakery last month. It was interesting. During my work experience program, I learned that it is important to take good care of the environment. Mr. Ota's actions were interesting. He always saved water and electricity. He also used vegetables from our city. Because he wanted to cut carbon dioxide emissions from transportation. Plus, he reduced garbage. When he had unsold bread in the evening, he went to the station. He sold the bread at lower prices. He said, "Now, my bread sells out, and I don't have to throw it away." His ideas were interesting.

B 【英語添削ツールからのアドバイス】

Ideas to Improve Your Essay

1. Use more vivid language to create a clear image for the readers. For example, you can describe the smells of the bakery or the taste of the bread you made.

2. Add some numbers showing the benefits of Mr. Ota's work. The information will show how important his actions are.

3. Share how this experience has influenced your daily life and your future job. For example, what do you usually do to help the environment? What do you want to be in the future?

C 【ブラウン先生からのアドバイス】

Subject: Re: Can you check my English?

Hi, Rio. I've read your writing. You did a great job, but I have two things to tell you. First, in written English, you can't use "because" at the beginning of a sentence. Second, you should use many different words. For example, you've used "interesting" three times. You should use other words without repeating the same word. By using many different words, you can express yourself better. That's more effective. Good luck!

I focused on traffic accidents by elderly drivers in Japan and did some research. Today, I would like to answer the following three questions.

1. Are there more elderly drivers than before?
2. Are there more traffic accidents by elderly drivers than before?
3. 16

Before I answer these questions, there are several things you have to remember. In Japan, we can get a motorcycle license when we are 16. We can also get a license to drive cars when we are 18. In this presentation, “elderly drivers” or “elderly people” are people aged 65 and over. “Traffic accidents” include accidents caused by motorcycles.

Let’s start with the first question. The answer is probably yes. Look at Graph 1. It shows how many elderly people had one or more driving licenses. The number has been rising since 2019. In 2023, nearly 20 million elderly people had one or more driving licenses. No one knows how many of them actually use cars or motorcycles, but we can assume that our society has more elderly drivers than before.

Let’s look at the second question. The answer is yes and no. Look at Graph 2. The bar graph shows that there have been fewer traffic accidents by elderly drivers in the long term. However, this is not true in the short term. From 2020 to 2022, there were under 70,000 traffic accidents by elderly drivers each year, but the number of traffic accidents 17. Besides, such accidents make up a high percentage of all traffic accidents. As the black line shows, this percentage has been going up since 2014. In 2023, it reached about 25%. In contrast, as the gray line shows, the percentage of traffic accidents by young drivers aged 24 and under has been gradually going down. In 2023, it dropped to about 12%, and the percentage of traffic accidents by elderly drivers was 18 that of traffic accidents by young drivers aged 24 and under.

Finally, I want to answer the third question. The answer is yes. Look at Graph 3. It shows that about 24% of the people who had one or more driving licenses in 2023 were 65 and over. As Graph 4 shows, elderly drivers caused almost one-third of all fatal accidents. To compare the two age groups easily, look at Graph 5. It shows how many fatal accidents were caused per 100,000 people with one or more driving licenses in each age group. Drivers aged from 16 to 64 caused 2.5 fatal accidents, and elderly drivers caused 3.9 fatal accidents. From this difference, we can say that elderly drivers cause more fatal accidents than drivers aged from 16 to 64.

次の英文を読んで、各問いに答えなさい。ただし、【1】～【5】は段落番号を示している。

【1】 The coronavirus pandemic has ended. These days, more people are enjoying sightseeing than in those years, and the number of foreign tourists in Japan has been recovering. Our country has set the goal of having 60 million visitors from other countries in 2030. More and more people will travel to Japan. However, if too many tourists come, it can cause some problems. The problems make sightseeing less comfortable. Moreover, they cause a lot of trouble for local people. The negative impact of tourism is called overtourism. Many countries are working on this tough issue.

【2】 Although tourism has brought a lot of jobs and money to Japan, it leads to many social problems. For example, many foreign tourists visit Yamanashi and Shizuoka to see Mt. Fuji. These areas have some photo spots, and they are crowded with tourists who want to take pictures to post on social media. This has created a lot of trouble for the local communities, such as heavy traffic, litter, and noise. Such difficult situations are sometimes dangerous because they may even cause accidents.

【3】 Let's take another example. Nara City is one of the most popular cities among tourists in Japan. In 2023, about 12.2 million tourists visited it. The most popular place is probably Nara Park. It is famous for many deer. They are protected as natural treasures, but they have been facing great danger. In April 2019, some deer died from eating litter, especially plastic bags on the ground.

【4】 How can we solve the issue of overtourism? In Nara City, local people have been working hard to deal with the problem. In October 2019, local people made a volunteer group to save the deer around Nara Park. They got support through crowdfunding and created many posters. They put up the posters in many places. The posters say that tourists must take their litter with them to keep the deer safe. The volunteer group has also held many clean-up events. About 1,300 people joined the events and cleaned the park. They have so far gathered about 240 kilograms of litter. This group is still active.

【5】 According to experts, there is no easy solution to overtourism. It may be the first step for local people to ask tourists to understand their difficulties. If the tourists realize them, both sides can work together. The tourists must obey the rules of local communities and give up the idea, "Away from home, one should feel no shame."
